

Student sentences will vary. Remind your students to think carefully about which ending mark fits with each type of sentence. It may be enough for your students to know there are different types of sentences without attaching the more complicated labels. The three types of sentences in the exercise are declarative, interrogative and exclamatory. Similar to classifying words into parts of speech, this is the way whole sentences are classified in the English language. Have your students use a variety of sentence types in their writing each day.
